1. The Państwowa Fabryka Maszyn Włókienniczych (State Factory of Textile Machines) is located on Władysława Street, in Kamienna Góra (Landeshut). It overlooks the River Bober.
2. After a short period of Russian administration, it was handed over to the Państwowy Zarząd Fabryk Włókienniczych (State Administration of Textile Factories) in 1949-1950. It seems to consist of two parts; one on the ground and the other underground. Security regulations forbid entry into the woods where the subterranean portion of the factory is located. The woods are enclosed by a fence of cement pillars around which barbed wire is wound. The part of the factory which is above ground is a former German airplane parts and ammunition factory in which there were still some old duraluminum sheets and rods as late as 1948. There was no production of plane parts as late as 1949, but the installations were ready to start production. The plant employed about 1,500 men.
